Dear Professor Thirring:

Your kind letter of April 13th arrived here while I was on a short trip to Europe. Unfortunately, I was unable to visit with you or your son in Göttingen. After the exchange of so many letters, I would have very much liked to meet you in person.

It is very difficult to judge the proposal of your son on the basis of the preface alone, and I have gotten in touch with him to ask him whether he could send us some significant chapters of the manuscript. Of course, we deeply appreciate the fact that you thought of our firm as a possible publisher for these lectures. We have just received today a letter from Dr. Hardung-Hardung, to whom we have written as per the enclosed copy.

Sincerely yours,
